Denmark: Imam says adulterous women should be stoned to death, mosque openly supports the Islamic State

By Robert Spencer
1 March 2016

"There have been numerous unsuccessful political attempts to close Grimhøj Mosque down..." Why were they unsuccessful? It should have been shut down long ago. As for the support for stoning, however, Danish authorities should not be surprised. Did they really expect that Muslims in Europe would voluntarily discard the elements of Islam that contradict European values? It's more likely that they had no idea what the elements of Islam actually were, and assumed them to be entirely benign; after all, only "Islamophobes" think otherwise.

There are renewed calls to shut down the controversial Grimhøj Mosque in Aarhus after a TV2 programme revealed that an imam has advocated stoning adulterers to death.

A hidden camera showed Abu Bilal Ismail, an imam at the mosque, teaching a class about what he says is the appropriate punishment for adultery.

"If a married or divorced women engages in fornication, and she is not a virgin, she should be stoned to death," Ismail says in the video clip.

"If someone violates their marriage, either man or woman, they commit adultery and their blood is thus halal [acceptable under Muslim law, ed.] and they should be killed by stoning. If the woman is a virgin, the punishment is whipping," he says.

The clip also shows the imam advocating an "eye for an eye" policy.

"If someone kills a Muslim, then they should be killed," he says, before adding that anyone who abandons their religion should also be killed.

This is not the first time that inflammatory remarks by Ismail have been caught on camera. In July 2014, a video emerged of him calling on God to "destroy the Zionist Jews".

The mosque itself is also not stranger to controversy. In September 2014, Grimhøj Mosque made international headlines after declaring its support for the terrorist group Isis. In January 2015, the mosque's chairman, Oussama El-Saadi, doubled down on the comments in a DR documentary, saying "we want the Islamic State to come out on top. We want an Islamic state in the world."

The mosque also has ties to the now-deceased Abdessamad Fateh, the first Danish citizen to ever be added to the United States' terror list, and East Jutland Police believe that around two dozen foreign fighters who have left Denmark for Syria or Iraq have worshipped at the mosque.

There have been numerous unsuccessful political attempts to close Grimhøj Mosque down and following the new TV2 programme, politicians of all stripes once again came out swinging against the mosque.

"It is completely unheard of that there are people in Denmark preaching this sort of thing. It clearly does not belong here. He [Abu Bilal Ismail, ed.] doesn't belong in Denmark either," Integration Minister Inger Støjberg told Ritzau, adding that there are limits to what the government can do about the mosque....

The Next Syrian Refugee Crisis: Child Brides Why not make a problem worse by ignoring it?

Abigail R. Esmann
29 Feb 2016

Reprinted from The Investigative Project on Terrorism.

While the West debates the humanitarian problem of Syrian refugees flooding across its borders, the discussions repeatedly turn to the dangers they might pose: what if there are terrorists among them? How can we be sure? How can we save those in need of saving and still be safe ourselves?

Yet for many of these refugees, married off against their will, the terror has already begun. They are 11 and 13 and 14 years old. Some of them are pregnant. Some are already mothers at 14. Their husbands are 25 or 38 or 40. And there is no escape.

"Child marriage existed in Syria before the start of the conflict," reports Girls Not Brides, a global partnership aimed at ending child marriage worldwide, "but the onset of war and the mass displacement of millions of refugees has led to a dramatic rise in the number of girls married as children."

Indeed, since the start of the refugee crisis, UNICEF reports, as many as "one-third of registered marriages among Syrian refugees in Jordan between January and March 2014 involved girls under 18," with some as young as 11.

In many cases, these marriages are set up by well-meaning parents who believe their daughters would be safer in the asylum centers if married and so, less likely to be approached sexually by strange men. In other instances, the daughters are sold off by parents who can no longer afford to keep them, or given in marriage to men already planning to leave Syria in the hopes that, once the couple arrives in the West, the parents can then legally join them.

But girls married in their early teens and younger face dark futures, according to Girls Not Brides. They are more likely to live in poverty, often are physically and emotionally abused, are at higher risk for sexually transmitted diseases, and are vulnerable to complications during childbirth – some of them fatal.

The plight of refugee child brides, which some authorities now call a crisis, first came to light in October last year, when 14-year old Fatema Alkasem vanished from a refugee center in the Netherlands along with her husband. She was nine months pregnant at the time.

Alkasem's disappearance led to an emergency session of Parliament, and the ratification of a long-delayed bill that would automatically dissolve the marriage of a minor, even if performed legally in the country where the nuptials took place. Under the revised law, the husbands of minors who continue living with their wives could be prosecuted for rape and deported. Where needed, the wives would receive special medical and psychological care and, wherever possible, placed in Dutch foster homes.

The impact of the case reached far beyond the Netherlands, where an average of three child brides arrives each week. With 15 million girls worldwide forced into marriage every year, and with child marriages among Syrian refugees skyrocketing, the problem of protecting these girls is now a global one.

But while the Netherlands has taken an aggressive stance to protect these young brides, who are often sexually abused, other countries are more circumspect, even as the crisis deepens. In Norway, for instance, officials determined in December that 61 underage migrants were already married when they arrived (including one 11-year-old girl). But it was the publicized tale of a 14-year-old girl arriving with her 18-month-old child and 23-year-old husband, also in December, that ignited public outcry and prompted new focus by the government on the issue. Police sought to prosecute the case on criminal grounds, noting that Norway's age of consent for sexual relations is 16. Yet others, such as feminist activist Unni Wikan, argued to the contrary, that Norway "might have to accept that underage refugees are married and have children." At this writing, the debate is still ongoing.

Opinions are also mixed in Denmark, where a January report of the country's asylum system revealed that 27 underage girls were married, including two 14-year-olds, one of whom was pregnant. Speaking to newspaper Metroexpress, conservative party spokesman Naser Khadir minced no words: "It's called pedophilia when a man gets a 14-year-old pregnant," he said. "We can give asylum to the 14-year-old, but we should kick the grown man out." The husband in this case is said to be 24.

In the interim, asylum-seekers under the age of 15 – Denmark's legal age of consent – are to be separated from their spouses and their cases reviewed by immigration officials.

But here, too, some believe that it is better to recognize such marriages. Prominent Danish imam Oussama El Saadi of Aarhus told Metroexpress that these marriages are "part of the culture" of the refugees, and so should be looked at "differently," according to the Copenhagen Post.

Whatever one thinks of such reasoning, there is one urgent argument to support the idea that Europe should recognize these marriages, or at least find alternatives to simply rejecting them: the risk these girls face of becoming the targets of honor killings, murdered by their estranged husbands or even their own parents. A young woman who has been married – and especially one who has given birth – is no longer seen as "pure" in strict Islamic culture, thereby sully her family's reputation. The only recourse, in far too many Muslim families, is to cleanse the family through her blood – or murder. Even if she were to be spared such a fate, a Muslim man would be unlikely to marry her in future.

These are concerns European governments must consider in helping these young women.

In the Netherlands, officials already are taking the threat of honor killings seriously. In an e-mail, Parliamentarian Aatje Kuiken, a member of the Dutch labor party (PvdA) who was instrumental in changing the minority marriage laws, said that special teams have been set up to focus on the issue, and give the girls extra protection where needed. Hopefully, other countries will swiftly follow suit.

In Norway, however, officials are taking a different approach: providing classes for migrant men on the appropriate treatment of women. Such courses in European codes of behavior and ideas about sexuality and sexual norms, according to the New York Times, establish "a simple rule that all asylum seekers need to learn and follow: 'to force someone into sex is not permitted in Norway, even when you are married to that person.'"

Such classes currently are voluntary, suggesting that those men who most need them, those more inclined to insist on the social norms of their home countries, and who firmly maintain that their wives are their property, are actually the most unlikely to enroll. Still, the initiative offers hope and could provide a model for other states and the possibility of long-term progress – if not to change the lives of these young child brides, perhaps, one day, to change their daughters'.

"The government is misleading the Canadian people" about what they mean by "infrastructure"

Brian Lilley
28 Feb 2016

Most of us think of "infrastructure" as temporary projects like the creation of roads and bridges.

However -- as I've been warning for months -- it's clear that Justin Trudeau's Liberals are referring to permanent pet projects like a national daycare program.

Editorial Comment

When Liberals mislead us with "social infrastructure" what they are really talking about is a substantial increase in the size of the public service and, hence a substantial increase in unfunded pension liabilities. But that's okay, I guess, because like some third world countries it's perfectly legitimate to force your kids to pay off the debts incurred by the parents.

Which suggests another point. Is it actually ethical to force future generations to pay for a social program that they never had an opportunity to vote for?

One of my frustrations with politicians but especially this current Liberal government is the very simplistic approach to issues like economics. I know that I am not a particularly sophisticated thinker on many topics and do not have the formal education required to offer substantial analysis on many of the complex and serious portfolios of government. This is why I am frustrated and perplexed by not just Mr. Trudeau but also by his supporters. It would be nice if once in a while Mr. Trudeau could put together a reasoned, coherent, and substantial case for his policies and proposals. In an attempt to be objective, I would like to have more of this from all politicians. With that said, from my biased right leaning view, conservatives do a much better job of this.

I believe that issues should be approached from a classical philosophical approach. We should start with a premise. In the case of Mr. Trudeau and his approach, I assume the premise is spending tax payer dollars on government programs. It would be nice if he could begin by telling us which programs and projects he wants to spend tax payer dollars on. Then, if he could elevate his thoughts it would be good to get a coherent argument on how and why this spending is good for Canadian citizens? This would involve a set of premises that supported a conclusion. Hopefully, a conclusion that made sense. Like most intelligent people, I dislike governments spending my money on initiatives and programs that are forced on me. Now, I have to check myself here. I am not against all government programs and spending. I recognize the value of things like EI, welfare, accessible health care, etc. But where should it end and where should it begin? It would be nice if it began with a government being honest in its intentions and agenda. And, it would be nice to know there was an end or a limit! With every successive progressive government there is another social spending project that is measured in ever increasing base units of one billion dollars. The money is one thing but then there is the inexorable push by governments to engineer society and control its citizens. The reason I like Canada (besides its geography and riches of natural resources) is that it is still a free country. I want to be free and especially free of government. I would also like to be free to keep the money that I earn. I want to be free from someone imposing their philosophies on me. If a couple wants to put their kids in daycare then that is their choice but don't make tax payers foot the bill. Going back to the larger concept of government and clear policy making I want to adapt an idea from Kevin O'Leary. He said something along the lines that government is where money goes to die. He is dead on. For every dollar government collects in taxes there is a cost to the business that generated that revenue. Then there is a cost to collect that money, there is another cost to administer that money and manage it. Finally there is the very inefficient process of reinvesting that money in ways that are often unfair and counterproductive. Federal governments collect taxpayer money that gets transferred to provinces which gets transferred to municipalities which gets transferred to organizations that issue contracts to private corporations that have been lobbying all three levels of government for the contracts that were driven by special interest groups driving an agenda set out by a politician who wants your vote.

At least when Chrétien and Martin were in control of the Liberal party they had decent conservative fiscal sense. I'm still waiting for Trudeau to make any kind of sense.

Canada needs a new political party. The Liberals have become socialists and made the NDP more irrelevant than ever and Harper's Conservatives were too Liberal. What we need is a new right of centre party that, in all considerations be they economic, environmental or security, will put the interests of the Canada and the Canadian people first.

Liberals to scrap regulations intended to deter using marriage fraud to become Canadian

CJNews Editor
1 March 2016

Another reform in the immigration policy will soon make it easier and faster for foreign nationals to become Canadians.

John McCallum, Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship, told The Hill Times that sponsored spouses of Canadians will be granted immediately upon arriving in Canada a permanent resident status.

"When spouses come in now, they don't immediately become permanent residents; there's a two-year period where they are not yet permanent residents," Mr. McCallum (Markham-Thornhill, Ont.) said in an interview with The Hill Times. "We said in our platform that we will end that so that they will become permanent residents on arrival."

In October 2012 the Conservative government introduced a new regulation intended to deter people from using marriages of convenience to cheat their way into Canada. The regulations apply to spouses or partners in a relationship of two years or less who have no children in common with their sponsor at the time they submit their sponsorship application.

The spouse or partner must live in a legitimate relationship with their sponsor for two years from the day on which they receive their permanent resident status in Canada. The status of the sponsored spouse or partner may be revoked if they do not remain in the relationship.

"There are countless cases of marriage fraud across the country," explained then Citizenship, Immigration and Multiculturalism Minister Jason Kenney. "I have consulted widely with Canadians, and especially with victims of marriage fraud, who have told me clearly that we must take action to stop this abuse of our immigration system. Sometimes the sponsor in Canada is being duped and sometimes it's a commercial transaction. Implementing a two-year conditional permanent residence period will help deter marriage fraud, prevent the callous victimization of innocent Canadians and help us put an end to these scams."

The Hill Times reported that McCallum "acknowledged that marriage of convenience or marriage fraud is an important issue that must be dealt with, but said sponsored spouses should not be made to wait for two years to become permanent residents."

"When spouses come in now, they don't immediately become permanent residents; there's a two-year period where they are not yet permanent residents," Mr. McCallum (Markham-Thornhill, Ont.) said in an interview with The Hill Times. Liberals To Give Refugees More Health Benefits Than Canadians

The liberal government has announced they will restore the refugee health plan that the conservatives have dismissed.

The Health plan hints that 100% coverage will be given to refugees until they have full Canada status, a job and pay taxes.

This included dental and vision. Also in the plan is vaccine for diseases.

For original Canadians, health care is provided if you pay taxes. Of course refugees don't have the funds for health care, but neither do the almost 1 million Canadians that are out of work.

So far refugees receive far better treatments than Canadians do.

Editorial Comment

The CRA is a rogue and almost lawless organization of the government who is doing their best to steal legal tax refunds from Canadians that have live all their lives in Canada and paid taxes and improved the country. These bastards steal our legitimate refunds while pretty boy pisses it away by the hundreds of millions. He may turn out to be an even bigger prick than his father.

Yep....the scumbag lying Liberals have sleazed their way back into power. Now any Canadian the actually worked for a living, paid taxes and contributed to the betterment of Canada is totally fucked because Trudeau and his Liberals are back in power. He is just a mirror image of his father and the lying Liberal party.

The Liberals do not care. They can import 1-2 million refugees, give the a Canadian flag and a Liberal t shirt and they are back in power at the next election.... just in time to fuck the Canadians that actually worked to build this country.

Wow, that's disgusting, I didn't agree with letting any of those people over here in the first place, carrying diseases the West hasn't seen in hundreds of years. Now mini me Trudeau wants to allow another 100000 of these so called refugees/possible terrorists into Canada. What's he thinking? Its very sad when we don't take care of our own homeless, or veterans but we will allow these people in and cater their every need, something is so very wrong with this picture! Wake up Trudeau we don't want anymore refugees that are a total drag on our already hurting economy!

Thousands of Muslims Converting to Christianity After Witnessing ISIS Horror

25 Dec. 2015

More and more Kurdish Muslims living in Iraq and Syria are turning to Christ after witnessing the brutality of extremist groups like ISIS, who carry out horrific acts in the name of Allah, Christian aid workers have revealed.

A ministry leader in the Kurdish Region of Iraq told the Christian Aid Mission that his organization can barely keep up with the desire of refugees to learn about Christ and the Bible, which has grown increasingly strong since ISIS overtook many parts of the region. "They're just sick of Islam," he said.

"People are very hungry to know about Christ, especially when they hear about miracles, healing, mercy and love."

He added, "As terrifying and horrifying as ISIS is, they did us a great favor because they came and have shown them all the killing, saying that it's all in the Koran verses. So now we don't have to say much, we just say the truth."

Numbers released by the UN in January estimated the Kurdish Region of Iraq is hosting 900,000 refugees, around 233,000 from Syria and the rest from elsewhere in Iraq.

As well as Kurds, who have fled northern Syria, the region has also accepted thousands of Arabs fleeing the cities of Anbar province, which the terrorist group captured in 2014.

The ministry director revealed that his organization provides aid to displaced people in tents and whatever dilapidated or unfinished buildings they can find for shelter, with needs for blankets, heaters, food and diapers still being high.

Many Muslims also in Syria converted to Christianity after they faced horror of Islamic State ISIS that occupy and destroy their country. Most of these Christians are accepting Christianity as a gratitude of Orthodox Christianity Russia and Putin's intervention that is portrayed in Syria as a savior that come to protect Syria and Syrian people from terror of Islamic State ISIS.

A lot of people respect very much their friends from Russia that is their main reason to accept Christianity that is way more peaceful religion than violent radical Islam that give them suffering, death and make them refugees in the world.

35 Million Muslim Migrants May Set Sights On Europe

21 Sept. 2015

A Hungarian government official made an astounding prediction Friday that up to 35 million migrants could flood into Europe as part of a historic population shift, as yet another European country felt the pain. The comment from Hungary's foreign minister came as Republicans in Congress have started signing on to a bill that would close the U.S. off to refugees for the foreseeable future, a direct counter-punch to President Obama's plan to bring in 85,000 foreign refugees next year, including 10,000 from ISIS controlled territory in Syria. But time is running out for Europe, where the days of debating policy in a crisis-free environment are over. First Serbia and Hungary, then Germany and now Croatia have watched what many are now calling an invasion of migrants bullying their way across sovereign borders, many of them young men carrying false identification or no identification at all.

Major media outlets such as the BBC, CNN and NBC continue to paint the crisis as a spontaneous event caused by people "fleeing conflicts in Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan," as the BBC reported. But those conflicts have been going on for years and the war-refugee narrative was refuted by a former Egyptian military officer in an interview with WND earlier this week. The surge at Croatia's border started after Hungary closed off its border three days ago.

Thousands of migrants broke through Croatian police lines at Tovarnik and Bezdan, overwhelming the border patrol units who refrained from using non-lethal force, such as water cannons or tear gas.

Croatia's interior minister says the country is "absolutely full." And Hungary's foreign minister, Peter Szijjártó, told the Hungarian Times that 30 to 35 million migrants could end up making the trip by sea and land to Europe from the destabilized Third World.

"It's a self delusion to call this situation a migration crisis; it is a massive migration of nations, with inexhaustible reserves," Szijjártó told the newspaper. "I don't think that the analysis results, stating that 30-35 million people out there could possibly become migrants, would be an exaggeration."

"Libya, Yemen, Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan are all countries with a huge population and an extremely unstable situation."

1971 Bangladesh genocide

In 1971, Muslims murdered 2.4 million Hindus and raped 200,000 Hindu women

Will the Muslim violence against the Indian people, and the contamination of barbaric Islamic ideals blended into their culture, ever end? The Christians and Hindus are the largest victims of perpetual Islamic invasions and violence lasting for more than 1000 years. Muhammad Ali Jinna, a member of the Indian National Congress and later of the All-India Muslim League (a Khilafat movement that also germinated the Palestine conflict), demanded a two-state partition, creating the Lahore Resolution, which formed the separate creation of Pakistan.

This partition of people created a domino effect of other tensions and problems spreading from Khalistan to Bangladesh, to Kashmir, to Balochistan and to continued terrorism and tension existing even today. The British tried to discourage Muhammad Ali Jinna against rallying for the partition and warned against it many times, which ended in riots, mass exodus, clashes and deaths of millions. The article covers a poorly exposed incident of Muslim massacres of Hindus that we never hear about. It's a pity the article forms a common Hindu anti-Western mindset, and fails to acknowledge any attention to the simple fact that Britain saved India from Muslim rule. India would bend to Mecca today had it not been for the clever rulers of South India who formed an alliance with Britain for exclusive trade agreements which developed into British rule and the expulsion of Muslim rule and Sharia law. You never hear Indian people admit to this fact. Instead they are focused purely on anti-Western rhetoric. It's not Britain who destroyed India. It's Islam that looted, massacred and destroyed Indian culture from within. Muslim terrorism, attacks, tensions continue in India to this day.

Understanding Islamic violence; how to defend our freedoms

Interview by People of Shambhala.

In the wake of renewed violence against Hindus in Pakistan, and with more than 100 Hindu families seeking asylum in India, Director of the Canadian Hindu Advocacy group spoke to People of Shambhala. Mr. Banerjee talks about the background to the conflict, and why Pakistan was created in 1947. Why the West should include Hinduism, not just the "Judeo-Christian" tradition. And he also discusses Islam and violence against Hindus and the West, and how we can defend our values and freedoms.

Pos: At the moment about 100 Hindu families are seeking asylum in India, from Pakistan, and are claiming discrimination and violence. There were four doctors murdered on the first day of Eid, and, I think, a Sikh was stabbed as well. Can you tell us a little about that situation?

RB: Sure. The situation is very natural. Most people don't understand what Pakistan is. Pakistan is a country that was formed for the Muslims. India is a multi-ethnic country for everybody. So Pakistan was formed with the very idea that the only people that should be in Pakistan are Muslims. There is nothing strange about what's going on in Pakistan today. It's being going on for a long time.

At independence Pakistan's population was about ten percent Hindu and Sikh. Now it's less than one percent. So the question is where did that nine percent go? Well, they were either ethnically cleansed, driven away, or slaughtered in large numbers in the 1971 war between India and Pakistan. In East Pakistan an estimated 2.4 million Hindus were slaughtered in just one year, and hundreds of thousands of Hindu women were raped.

There is nothing surprising about any of this because Islam was introduced into the Asian subcontinent with the objective of occupying and exterminating the Hindus. According to the historian William Durant, and other historians, an estimated 80 million Hindus were killed, were slaughtered, and thousands and thousands of Hindu temples were smashed, and mosques were built on top of them. The Muslims of India tried very hard over the period of their 700 years [of occupation] to wipe out the Hindus. But there was resistance from some of the Hindu kingdoms. They never had full control over India so they were unable to achieve that goal. But that's the eternal goal. According to Islam, Hinduism is the lowest form of life on the planet. Because Hindus, according to them, they're polytheistic, they believe in multiple gods. They believe we worship idols, and idol worship is a sin in Islam.

PoS: One thing that has struck me is just the extent of the attacks on Hindus, Buddhists, Yazidis, Zoroastrians, Kalash. Yet we don't hear anything about this. You mentioned the war of 71; 2.4 million dead, 200,000 Hindu women raped, but we don't hear anything about that in the West.

RB: No you don't, because there's a systematic effort by Muslims and petrodollars to cover it up. The reason you don't hear about it is because they make tremendous effort to silence it.

PoS: In all fairness, some Middle Eastern newspapers that probably cater mostly to Muslims have covered some of it, but you don't seem to find it in the West, which is even more incredible. Why do you think Western journalists won't cover something like that? The West always portrays itself as caring about minorities and being the people that always stand up to stop genocide, and that are always campaigning against violence against minorities. But nothing.

RB: This may offend you a little bit.

PoS: It won't [laughs].

RB: It probably will [laughs]. But, it's because the West have been hypocrites.

PoS: Yeah.

RB: If you look at Britain, for example, when they went to India they did not stop genocide or massacres, they expedited them. They actually supported the Muslims against the Hindus, helped them to perpetrate massacres. In terms of the establishment of the state of Pakistan, if you read people like William Dalrymple, a British historian, it becomes quite clear that the British encouraged the creation of Pakistan in order to divide the [anti-colonial] independence movement. [Dalrymple's theories are inaccurate and merely theories. The Britain discouraged against the partition of India, but the decision was created by Indian-Muslim voters themselves spearheaded by Muhammad Ali Jinnah]

PoS: Do you think there is still a kind of colonial residue in the atmosphere. Do you think there is some kind of patronizing attitude in the media? Is that why we don't see atrocities reported?

I've heard this question before. That it's a form of racism that they don't condemn Muslims for their human rights violations is because they are non-Western and [therefore] they are expected to be barbaric. There might be some of that, but these days it's rather more a culture of fear. I mean, if you publish a cartoon of Mohammed, even if you're in the West, you get threatened, and you possibly get killed, and you have riots going on. So now it's more of a culture of fear.

PoS: On that note, Subramanian Swamy, the Hindu professor at Harvard, was fired because he wrote an article on how to wipe out Islamic terror [in India]. I read it. I didn't find it shocking... I suppose [at the most controversial point] he's saying that non-Hindus would have to appreciate their Hindu roots or they wouldn't be allowed to vote. What was your take on his article and on his being fired?

RB: The article was a hundred percent correct. He did not say – as has been claimed – that all non-Hindus should be forced to convert to Hinduism or anything like that. He didn't even say that non-Hindus should be oppressed or treated badly within India. He just said they should have a respect for Hinduism, and that they should acknowledge the proper history, especially the history of the Muslims in India. There was no such thing as Islam in India before about 1,000 AD. Muslims invaded and forcibly converted millions of Hindus to Islam. That's just a historical fact. And that they should acknowledge that historical fact.

PoS: Why is it when it comes to Islam, we don't stick for minorities? We don't stick up for women's rights? We don't stick up for gay rights? All the things that we would stand up for at any other time.

RB: It's a combination of different things. Political correctness is part of it, but it's not the whole explanation. It's more a simple combination of fear and bribery. In many cases it's just the money and influence pouring in from the Middle East demanding that no negative aspects of Islam be spoken about. It's the carrot and the stick, the carrot being the money being the money flowing in from petrodollars, and the stick being [the fear of] rioting and beheading over a cartoon or any slight to Islam.

PoS: In 2008, there was the Mumbai attacks. A couple of things about that were striking. One thing was the way the Western media covered it. If memory serves me correctly – and I think it does – it was implied that the attacks in Mumbai were against essentially Western targets, such as the Taj Mahal Hotel. Do you think they were going after Western targets or do you think there was another incentive?

RB: Well, most of the people that were killed were Hindus. So, I wouldn't call them Western targets... again it's the stupidity of the West, reporting it in this way... It's not necessarily the case that they [the terrorists] were trying to kill as many White people, or White tourists, as possible. They just wanted to attack the most visible, or the wealthiest, or the most high profile, targets. Those aren't Western targets. The only target that they went out of their way to attack that was not related to Hinduism was the synagogue, the Jewish target.

PoS: You probably follow what is going on in Europe, where we hear a lot of calls for sharia. And some people are trying to defend liberal democracy, but they don't always seem to know what they're defending. You believe that Hindu values and the values of liberal democracy and modernity are the same. Can you tell me what those would be?

RB: The one mistake that Westerners all make – including conservatives – is that they define Western values and the values of liberal democracy strictly as Judeo-Christian. And I don't think that's the case. I believe Hindu values have to be included in that as well because India is the world's largest democracy and it's 80 percent Hindu, so how can it just be Judeo-Christian. Most people will tell you that it [democracy] comes from the British, which is obnoxious and insulting and racist. I would think that you should want to give credit to the people of that country rather than to an invasive force a hundred years ago.

The values of democracy are more in tune with Hinduism than with many, many, many other faith traditions, because if you look at Hinduism there was an openness – the ability of people within Hinduism to have different gods, multiple deities, and to worship as they please... The ability to allow this freedom, to worship as one pleased without being excommunicated or called a heretic, that's one of the factors that makes Hinduism a more democratic religion than many others.

When people say that the West is a result of Judeo-Christian civilization, it's also a combination of that and Socrates, Aristotle, and others, and they were in pre-Christian times, and they were not Jewish either. They were part of a faith that was somewhat similar to Hinduism in the sense that it had multiple gods. I think, on the one hand, it's difficult because, it [the conception of democracy and the West] has to be more inclusive; it can't be just Judeo-Christian. You've got to embrace some of those other traditions as well. On the other hand let's not start saying Islam had something to do with it as well; [because] no it didn't.

PoS: Are there historical links between the ancient Greeks and Hinduism?

RB: I'm not a historian, so I'm not a hundred percent certain, but some of the words and names... Sanskrit is the original Indo-European language... so there are some similarities between ancient Greek and Sanskrit.

PoS: Yes, that's from Indo-European. Proto-Indo-European is the root of many European languages and Indian as well. And some of the ancient Greeks were influenced by Buddhism as well, so there must be some links [to Hinduism].

RB: Yeah, yeah, I understand there were. There must be some linkages.

PoS: That would be pretty interesting [to research into]. Sort of on that note, today we have a lot of Christian groups that embrace interfaith dialogue with Islam, and they have imams up on stage, and it's all very lovey-dovey. Yet they react hysterically to New Age spirituality – which is a very pacifistic form of spirituality – but they are extraordinarily hysterical about that and think it's all Satan. It strikes me, whether you like it or not, New Ageism is a big part of Western culture and has been for some time. They're obviously frightened by it, and think it's going to destroy civilization. But, I don't know if you know this, but Hindu nationalism and Buddhist nationalism [and anti-colonialism] were partly revived – or were encouraged to be revived – through a couple of Western proto-New Age people of the Theosophical Society.

RB: Yes, I heard about that... the Theosophical Society in Calcutta.

PoS: Related to that, do you think we should be forming alliances between Hindus, and people who practice Yoga, and spiritual people, and then Christians and Jews and Zoroastrians?

RB: Yes, I think Hinduism, and Buddhism, and Zoroastrianism, are a better fit for Western democracy and liberalism than Islam. I think maybe why some Christians feel kinship with Islam is that – for example, with the Inquisition – Christianity has behaved more like Islam than the peaceful, tolerant, Hindus and the Buddhists...[*this is a lack of historic accuracy. Christian history is filled with battles against Islamic invasions and barbarity]. I think you need a combination of tolerance and as strength. You shouldn't tolerate the intolerant.

PoS: No.

RB: Maybe if you could meld together the toughness of Christianity with some of the tolerance of Hinduism and Buddhism, and form an alliance, you may be able to get the elusive Holy Grail that everyone seems to be looking for, which is how to be strong enough to deter [political] Islam, while not sacrificing our values and principles of liberalism and human rights and democracy.

ISIS has its eyes set on Canada

Postmedia Network
29 Feb. 2016

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's Liberal government may be less concerned about the threat posed to Canada by the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria than the previous Conservative government, but it's clear the terrorists haven't forgotten about us.

Indeed, as Stewart Bell of the National Post reported Monday, Canadian authorities believe ISIS has formed a terrorist cell in Syria devoted to reaching out to potential English-speaking terrorists through social media, with a specific desk officer assigned to Canada.

The advantage to ISIS of recruiting allies among natural born Canadians is obvious.

It's because spontaneous "lone wolf" attacks by radicalized Canadians are far harder for our security forces to detect and prevent in advance than attacks by foreign fighters trying to sneak into Canada.

All ISIS has to do is troll the Internet for Canadians whose Twitter or Facebook posts suggest, for whatever reason, a profound hatred for Canada, inciting them to act on these feelings and offering to help them do so.

It doesn't matter that the vast majority of these social media encounters between ISIS and deranged or hate-filled Canadians may come to nothing, or be intercepted by our security forces before an attack is actually carried out.

All ISIS has to do is succeed one time in 100, or for that matter one time in 1,000, for the operation to be deemed a success.

Let's not forget that one lone wolf Canadian-born terrorist, Michael Zehaf-Bibeau, not only murdered Cpl. Nathan Cirillo, who was standing ceremonial guard at the National War Memorial in Ottawa, but was only confronted and shot to death by security forces after he had entered the very heart of our democracy on Parliament Hill.

In that context, we worry that Trudeau and the Liberals do not seem to be as concerned about these kinds of attacks, and the nature of the terrorist threat Canada faces, as they should be.

We suggest they spend less time worrying about protecting the Canadian citizenship rights of dual citizens who are convicted of terrorism, and more about the threat posed by Canadians enticed into carrying out acts of violence against their own country by ISIS.

After all, the primary duty of any Canadian government is to keep Canadians safe.

Editorial Comment

There is no doubt that Isis has its eyes on Canada, We have been threatened by them before. The last government understood what Islam is and what ISIS's goals are. They had put some laws in place to protect Canada and Canadians which Trudeau and his Liberal government have repealed. Never has the door to infiltration of our government been so threatened and with it Canada and Canadians. Trudeau has 12-13 Islamic Moslems in his party and he has given a very dangerous position Parliamentary Secretary to the foreign minister to Omar Alghabra, a Saudi-born former president of the Canadian Arab Federation, (a group that is so anti-Semitic, it had its government funding cut off.) He was heard to happily exclaim "at his nomination meeting for Mississauga-Erindale, "this is a victory for Islam. Islam won. Islam won... Islamic power is extending into Canadian politics." In his position as Parliamentary Secretary to the foreign Minister he is in charge of our international consulates and in charge of Canadian government policy. Will this mean tens of thousands of other Muslim radicals will come to Canada in the name of refugees and the ones that are here and already involved in government positions of any type, work to further the cause of Islam?

Liberals formally double size of immigration program for parents and grandparents

Stephanie Levitz , The Canadian Press
Published Friday, 26 February 2016

The Liberals have raised the cap on the number of applications the government will accept for the coveted parent and grandparent visa program.

The immigration minister issued formal instructions Friday that this year and in each year going forward, 10,000 applications will be accepted, up from 5000 in each of the previous two years.

Raising the cap on applications was a promise the Liberals made during the election campaign.

The move signals that the broader Liberal plan on how many immigrants Canada will accept in 2016 is likely nearing release, as Immigration Minister John McCallum had previously said the two were connected.

The parent and grandparent visa program is one of the most popular immigration streams but in 2011, the previous Conservative government shut it down, citing problems with the program and a need to work through a massive backlog in applications.

When they reopened the program in 2014, they made a number of changes, including increasing how much money someone is required to have before sponsoring a parent or grandparent, and how long that support must be guaranteed.

But the most criticized step was a cap on new applications at 5000. The Liberals had promised to increase it during last year's campaign.

They had signaled the move was coming in January, when rather than cutting off intake of new applications at 5000, they accepted over 14,000.

The first 10,000 complete files will be processed on top of those already in the system.

According to information on the Immigration Department's website, they are still working through files received before 4 Nov. 2011.

"These instructions contribute to a strategy to facilitate family reunification and fulfill the Government of Canada's commitment to double new application intake to a maximum of 10,000 applications annually," say the ministerial instructions for the new cap, published online Friday afternoon.

While the instructions change the cap, they don't change any other elements of the program, including the applications will be processed on a first-come, first-served basis.

This has created a lucrative business for couriers who are charging hundreds of dollars to guarantee an application is first in the queue.

After a public outcry earlier this year, McCallum had said he would look into if any changes could be made in future years, but noted the increased cap would ease some of the crunch.

In 2014, the last year for which full figures are available, just over 18,000 people were admitted into Canada under the program.

How many people will actually come to Canada this year under the program will be contained in what's known as the immigration levels plan, a document the government is required to publish each year by Nov. 1st.

Since the House of Commons was not sitting then because of the election, the Liberals now have until March 9th to publish the information.

Editorial Comment

The public outcry is coming mainly from one part of the world. People who have contributed zilch to our economy will be allowed to profit of our social programs. More old age pensioners... where are they going to get the money from? Forget ever collecting all those CCP contributions you paid into your whole working life people. It will be going to people who never worked a day in Canada. They have to get their OAP from somewhere and it will be from our pockets

Why should we encourage grandparents and parents of immigrants into this country? What could they possibly have to offer? Other than expensive medical bills for our public system and "Old World Values." So, it has been said numerous times that the aging Canadian population will soon cause a "crisis" in health care, among other programs, and they want to import more? Life-long Canadians have paid for these programs in advance; imports just take advantage without having contributed anything. Good decision.

Socialism has obviously spiraled out of control. Unfortunately for taxpayers all the damage will be done before those who voted Liberal wake up - not that voting any other way would have made a difference. What in our future will be called classic Turdeauism amounts to making taxpayers pay more and giving them absolutely no benefit for their added tax burden. Elderly immigrants, possibly in poor health, who won't even have to learn either of our official languages: how exactly do Canadians benefit from their coming to Canada?

To Justin the rest of the world is a bottomless source of Liberal voters. He continues to import them at a frightening pace. Parents and grandparents too old to work, who can't speak English or French, will they ever contribute a penny of tax to the Canadian kitty? No, we will all get to chip in to pay for their share. 4 more years of this. Justin is right: you won't recognize Canada by then.

Every single day there is another story about how the Liberals intend to bankrupt us. I want to see the promises to reinstate age 65 retirement and reforms to the electoral system, so 39% of voters can't give incompetent governments a majority, are being kept. I suspect those are the promises that won't be kept because they might actually benefit Canadians!

A great many of parents and grandparents obtain residency then after a few months in Canada, return to their home countries and only resurface for short visits, to collect pension and benefits, or when they are sick and need health care. This category should come with more robust financial obligations for sponsors and limitations on social benefits proportional to taxes paid and years of residency.

Turdeau Changing Canada One Immigrant at a Time

PM Turdeau and his Liberal government just can't move fast enough to remove the changes that the Harper government had put in place to protect Canada and its citizens and to keep Canadian values. With every bill repeal they are stripping Canadian cultures, traditions and values. Turdeau keeps tell us about his "vision" for Canada and that he and his government will show the world "that Canada is back." His "vision" of Canada is not how Canadians see Canada or worked to build and safe guard for ourselves and our children. With majority that 39.6 % of Canadians gave Turdeau, they have allowed him to become a dictator "change Canada" alright. "Change Canada" to a country that is not like the country that our ancestors built, a country that "we, the citizens" won't recognize and DO NOT WANT. There has got to be a way to remove him from office, let's find it and remove him before he destroys our country.

McCallum wants to remove the wait for permanent resident status because it makes spouses, mostly women, too dependant on their husbands. Does anyone see the stupidity and irony of this change? We will give immediate permanent resident status to these women "for their protection," while repealing the "Barbaric Practices Law" that allows female genital mutilation, forced child marriages and honor killings. Oh yes, Turdeau and his Liberal government is protecting women and children. Do you think? NDP Immigration critic Jenny Kwan supports this change claim that marriage fraud can be found and addressed if Immigration officials undertake due diligence before approving a spouse's application. Another stupid and ridiculous statement from the NDP. With the rush that the Liberals are putting on getting these immigrants and refugees into Canada, there is no "due diligence" in any part of application, whether it's for the approval of terrorists or fake spouse applications

Immigration Minister John McCallum says he's planning on introducing changes in the "next couple of months" that will grant permanent resident status to the sponsored spouses of so-called Canadians, immediately, upon arriving in Canada.

"When spouses come in now, they don't immediately become permanent residents; there's a two-year period where they are not yet permanent residents," Mr. McCallum (Markham-Thornhill, Ont.) said in an interview with The Hill Times. "We said in our platform that we will end that so that they will become permanent residents on arrival."

Currently, sponsored spouses of Canadians receive conditional permanent residency upon arrival in Canada and have to wait for two years to obtain permanent-resident status. If the relationship breaks down, the sponsored spouse's permanent residency can be revoked. Spouses holding conditional permanent resident status enjoy the same rights and benefits as any other permanent resident.

The Conservatives introduced the conditional permanent-resident provision in 2012 to address the issue of marriage fraud.

Since becoming the immigration minister in November, a number of Liberal MPs in ridings with large visible-minority populations have been asking Mr. McCallum (Markham-Thornhill, Ont.) to take immediate measures to make the application processing time of family sponsorship applications faster. Most MPs representing major urban centers from all parties say that issues related to immigration, refugees and citizenship account for 70 to 80 per cent of their constituency work.

Mr. McCallum, whose riding has the third-highest percentage of visible minority population at 82%, said that he finds it "abominable" that it takes almost two years for the spousal immigration applications to be processed, and after arriving in Canada, another two years to receive permanent-resident status. He said that his department is working on coming up with plans to speed up the application processing times. Mr. McCallum did not offer a specific target timeframe for reducing the application processing times, but said that it will be brought down "radically."

Rookie Liberal MP Gary Anandasangaree (Scarborough-Rouge Park, Ont.), a human rights lawyer and community activist, described Mr. McCallum's promise to eliminate the two-year wait for sponsored spouses to receive the permanent residency as "a great step." He said that one of the negative affects of this two-year wait is that it makes sponsored spouses, especially women, vulnerable and overly dependent on their sponsoring spouse.

"There's a lot of vulnerability, particularly with women who come here, sponsored by their spouse," Mr. Anandasangaree said, whose riding has a 70.2% visible minority population.

NDP Immigration critic Jenny Kwan (Vancouver East, B.C.) said she supports Mr. McCallum's intention to grant permanent residency to sponsored spouses immediately. She conceded that some people commit marriage fraud but added that this issue could be addressed if Immigration officials undertake due diligence before approving a spouse's application.

McCallum also said he is also looking into the issue of finding a solution for undocumented residents, but declined to give a deadline.

In interviews last week, Liberal MPs said that the government should also address the issue of undocumented people living in Canada without any legal status. They said that these people are a vulnerable segment of our society and the government should chart a way forward for them. Mr. McCallum last week declined to say if amnesty would be part of the solution.

"That's an issue we are looking at. We certainly haven't come to any such decision, but we're looking at it," Mr. McCallum said.

Meanwhile, Mr. McCallum introduced Bill C-6, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act, last week, which will bring several changes in citizenship law including repealing the government's power to revoke citizenship from dual citizens convicted of terrorism.

The Stephen Harper (Calgary Heritage, Alta.) Conservative government had obtained this authority in 2014 through changes in the Citizenship Act under controversial Bill C-24, the Strengthening of Canadian Citizenship Act. In this bill, the Conservatives also added a English or French language proficiency test as a prerequisite to receive Canadian citizenship, in addition to the knowledge test for individuals between the ages of 14 and 64. Mr. McCallum, last week, announced that the language and knowledge tests will remain in place but only for those 18 to 54.

'I'll do my damned duty on refugees,' says Merkel as it emerges nine out of ten Germans want limits on migrants coming to country

By Jennifer Newton for MailOnline
Published: Monday 29 February 2016

Angela Merkel was tackled on migration while appearing on German TV
She declared it was her 'damned duty' to help refugees coming to Europe
Came as new poll showed nearly all Germans want a cap on migration
But Merkel said she would be standing by her policy of not having a cap

Angela Merkel has declared she will carry out her 'damned duty' to help refugees despite a poll suggest nine out of ten Germans want a limit on migrants entering the country.

The German chancellor appeared on TV in the country last night and was pressed hard on the issue of the migration crisis and how it is affecting Europe.

It came on the same day a new poll was released with only 11% of respondents in Germany saying they didn't want a cap on migrants coming into the country.

And despite being questioned on her stance on not limiting the number of refugees, she said it was the only way to solve the crisis.

Speaking to ARD Television's Anne Will, she said: 'My damn duty and obligation consists of finding a collective way for this Europe (to address the crisis).'

And later on in her appearance, when the German leader was confronted about angry mobs opposing refugees arriving in their towns, she said that the country's constitution's most sacred principle was that 'human dignity is inviolable.'

She added: 'These are citizens who are doing something that I deeply reject.'

Her appearance came as a nationwide poll also suggested that 38% of Germans agreed that a cap should be set on the number of asylum seekers at 200,000 a year.

Meanwhile 21% of respondents said Germany should take in no migrants.

In the interview, Merkel was also tackled on Greece and said that the EU cannot allow Greece, a country bailed out from its huge debt crisis, to plunge into 'chaos' by shutting European borders to refugees.

She added: 'Do you seriously believe that all the euro states that last year fought all the way to keep Greece in the Eurozone - and we were the strictest - can one year later allow Greece to, in a way, plunge into chaos?'

Merkel also criticized the move by Austria and several Balkan countries to introduce border controls or cap daily migrant arrivals, creating a bottleneck in Greece as refugee boats continue to arrive from Turkey.

She explained: 'What has happened is exactly what we feared, that a country is now left alone with its problems, and we can't allow.'

Anger has been building in Greece, the European gateway for hundreds of thousands of migrants, after Vienna introduced a daily cap on asylum applications and four Balkan countries, Macedonia, Serbia, Croatia and Slovenia, tightened entry conditions.

Germany last year took in over one million asylum seekers, more than half from war-torn Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan, leaving Merkel exposed to rising criticism at home as well as from many EU partners.

Merkel said Germany's responsibility was 'not to solve the problem at the expense of another country but together with other countries.'

She said: 'That's what we did in the euro crisis and that's what we have to do in the refugee crisis.'

Turdeau gives would-be beheader his Canadian citizenship

28 February 2016

The Canadian government under the Liberal party and Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has submitted an amendment to the citizenship law for approval to the parliament, which among other things determines that Canadian citizenship will not be stripped from terrorists.

In the previous government under Prime Minister Stephen Harper, the law was modified granting the federal government the authority to negate the citizenship of those holding dual citizenship who were convicted of serious crimes, such as terror, espionage, treason and attacking Canadian security forces.

According to the planned change in the Canadian law terrorist Zakaria Amara, a Jordanian who was raised in Saudi Arabia and Cyprus before immigrating to Canada in 1997, will receive his Canadian citizenship back.

Amara is currently serving a life sentence for planning to detonate truck bombs in downtown Toronto during rush hour and to behead the prime minister. The Al Qaeda inspired terror cell he founded was nabbed just before blowing up truck bombs in 2006 near the Toronto Stock Exchange and CN Tower, with an Ontario military base also on their list of targets.

The new law will also let off the hook nine terrorists who were warned their citizenship would be revoked.

Teenage girls stoned to death by ISIS...for being in the VICINITY of men

Islamic State (ISIS) barbarians have stoned two girls to death just for being in the presence of men, it emerged today.

By Nick Gutteridge
Fri, 26 Feb 2016

The sick Jihadis executed the teenagers and flogged two young men after the four were found together in a house.

They accused the girls, 17-year-old Hasna and Madiha (16) of committing adultery simply because they were in the same vicinity as members of the opposite sex.

A Sharia court ruled the pair should be sentenced to death, and they were stoned in front of a baying crowd in the Syrian city of Deir ez-Zor.

Two older men were then sentenced to 50 lashes - also in public - after being identified by the sham court as Abu Zubair al-Idlbi and Maher Hameed.

The shocking incident is just the latest sick killing carried out by ISIS, which is going to increasingly desperate lengths to impose its twisted ideology on terrified locals.

According to local activists the two girls did not know the men they were found with, which is what led to the accusation of adultery.

Local activist Ahmed Ramadan told ARA News: "The execution took place in the Hamidiya district of Deir ez-Zor on Tuesday afternoon, where hundreds of people gathered to witness the stoning of the two young girls.

"The decision of the Sharia Court raised the anger of Deir ez-Zor's residents, who considered it unfair to kill the two girls by stoning and merely flog the men and set them free."

Last week the maniac Jihadis executed four women in the same way for "committing adultery" after they were raped by ISIS fighters.

The victims were arrested even though corrupt Jihadi militants are said to have caught them being abused during a raid in the Iraqi city of Mosul.

They too were brought before a terrorist sharia court which ordered them to be publicly executed without giving any details about their alleged abusers.

The four women were stoned to death in front of a large crowd, according to local sources.

Media activist Abdullah al-Malla said: "The four women were most likely exposed to sexual abuse at the hands of ISIS militants before being driven out of their homes and transferred to the Sharia court.

"Apparently, the victims had been raped by ISIS Jihadis and then stoned to death on charges of committing adultery."

Liberals spend $3.5M in government advertising in first 4 months

Veterans Affairs spent $2.26M in ads to honour Canada's servicemen and women ahead of Remembrance Day

By Susana Mas, CBC News
29 Feb. 2016

Justin Turdeau's Liberals spent $389,750 in internet advertising to urge Canadians to welcome Syrian refugees.
(Nathan Denette/Canadian Press)

The Liberal government has spent approximately $3.5 million in advertising since coming into power, with most departments choosing to purchase internet advertising over TV ads in prime time.

The government ads were purchased by six departments within the first 100 days of Justin Turdeau's Liberals being sworn into office on Nov. 4th, said Michèle LaRose, a media relations spokesperson with Public Services and Procurement Canada in respond to a query by CBC News.

The previous Conservative government spent a total of $68.7 million in advertising in 2014-15.

Veterans Affairs Canada was responsible for the bulk of the new spending and was the only department to spend money on TV ads, with an estimated total media ad buy of $2.26 million.

The department purchased internet, television and out-of-home advertising to honour and remember Canada's servicemen and women in the lead-up to Remembrance Day on Nov. 11th In its ongoing efforts to recruit new Canadians to join its depleting ranks, National Defence spent an estimated $454,000 on internet advertising to encourage millennials to consider a career in the Canadian Armed Forces.

That also included internet ads "to recruit for various specialized positions in the Forces," LaRose said.

With the government committed to resettling 25,000 Syrian refugees by March 1, the Department of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship purchased internet advertising at an approximate cost of $389,750 to urge Canadians to welcome Syrian refugees to Canada.

A cap on ad spending?

The Liberals pledged in their election platform to ban "partisan" government ads and appoint an advertising commissioner to help the auditor general oversee government advertising.

The Canadian Taxpayers Federation, which has long been a vocal critic of governing parties using taxpayer dollars to fund partisan ads, is supportive of the new government's pledge.

Aaron Wudrick, the federal director of the CTF, said while the majority of the ads approved by the Turdeau government don't appear to be partisan in nature, sometimes it's easy to blur the lines between politics and policy.

"I don't think any of these jumped out at me as overtly partisan but it's kind of subjective that's why we want to have a body like the auditor general or an advertising commissioner make that decision," Wudrick said in a phone interview with CBC News on Monday.

Wudrick questioned, for instance, the need to spend millions on ads ahead of Remembrance Day. "That's obviously a very important day... but it's not clear to me what the policy purpose of that is."

According to Wudrick, the government should also consider how much spending on ads is "necessary and appropriate," particularly given the country's deteriorating fiscal outlook.

With the federal budget scheduled for tabling on March 22nd, Wudrick said he'll be watching to see if the government will commit to putting a cap on total ad spending.

Public Services and Procurement Canada spent an estimated $150,000 in internet advertising to promote a government initiative known as the Language Portal of Canada. The website is part of the Canadian government's commitment to promote both official languages.

Health Canada spent an estimated $110,000 in internet advertising to promote the health risks associated with the seasonal flu and approximately $115,000 in internet advertising to recruit nurses for positions in First Nations and Inuit communities on reserve.

Justice Canada spent the least of the six departments, with an ad buy of some $32,000 in internet advertising by the external panel to consult Canadians on the implementation of physician-assisted dying.

The panel, which was established in 2015 under the previous Conservative government, made public its report in January 2016. A special joint committee of MPs and Senators followed the external panel with their own consultations and issued its final report on Thursday.

The Immigration Department also purchased $2.69 million in print and internet advertising to raise awareness about new Electronic Travel Authorization entry requirement which visa-exempt foreign nationals will need to fly to Canada starting on March 15. "These ads and the budget were approved by the previous government," said LaRose in an email to CBC News.

The Prime Minister's Office could not say when the government plans to appoint an advertising commissioner, only that it will update Canadians "soon."

"We remain committed to ending partisan government advertising," said PMO spokesman Cameron Ahmad in an email to CBC News.

The Office of the Auditor General told CBC News while there has been some consultation with the government, no decisions have been made.

"We have never overseen government advertising, but we can audit advertising programs and spending if we so choose," said Ghislain Desjardins, a spokesperson for the auditor general's office.

Desjardins said the last time the auditor general performed an audit of advertising activities by the government was in 2007.

Incest and necrophilia 'should be legal' according to youth branch of Swedish Liberal People's Party

'Incest can be considered unusual and disgusting, but the law cannot stem from it being disgusting'

Lizzie Dearden, Elsa Vulliamy
Wednesday 24 February 2016

Incest between siblings and necrophilia should be legalized, a branch of the Swedish Liberal People's Party has argued.

The Stockholm branch of the party's youth wing (LUF) voted on the controversial motion at its annual meeting on Sunday.

It called for the repeal of several laws to make consensual sex between brothers and sisters aged over 15 legal, as well as allowing people to "bequeath" their bodies for intercourse after death without fearing the perpetrator would be prosecuted.

Cecilia Johnsson, president of LUF Stockholm, told Aftonbladet counter-incest legislation amounted to "morality law", adding: "These laws protect no one right now".

"I understand that [incest] can be considered unusual and disgusting, but the law cannot stem from it being disgusting".

The LUF also voted to support the legalization of sexual acts with a corpse, on the condition that the person consented while they were still alive.

Ms Johnsson said: "You should get to decide what happens to your body after you die, and if it happens to be that someone wants to bequeath their body to a museum or for research, or if they want to bequeath to someone for sex, then it should be okay."

The central Liberal People's Party disagreed, however, with spokesperson Adam Alfredsson telling Expressen the proposals were "nothing like the mother party endorses."

"Incest is and should remain illegal," he added. "We think it will continue to be illegal to use a dead man's body in [a sexual] way."

Meanwhile, a former Swedish Liberal MP, Carl B Hamilton, took to Facebook to dismiss the youth wing's proposals as a publicity stunt concocted by "nitwits".

SUF Stockholm president Cecilia Johnsson LUF

The Independent has contacted Ms Johnsson for a response.

It is not the first time similar proposals have been raised in Europe.

In 2014, the German Ethics Council also called for an end to the criminalization of incest between siblings, after examining the case of a man who was jailed for having four children with his sister.

The council argued that the risk of disability in children was not sufficient to warrant a law putting couples in "tragic situations", and that decriminalizing incest would not fuel the spread of the "very rare" practice.

"The majority of the German Ethics Council is of the opinion that it is not appropriate for a criminal law to preserve a social taboo," a statement said.

A spokeswoman for Angela Merkel's CDU party dismissed the possibility of abolishing criminal punishment at the time.

These European leaders oppose Islamification -- but media won't report it

By Victor Laszlo
27 Feb. 2016

There are many national leaders who clearly state demonstrable truths about the consequences of large numbers of supporters of Islamic doctrine living in Western democracies. But why do so few people ever get to hear what they say outside their own countries?

When Germany's Angela Merkel makes a pro-Migrant statement, Western media can't broadcast it fast or favourably enough.

But what about when say, the President of the Czech Republic, Miloš Zeman, on Feb. 12 2016 made a clear and unambiguous statement about his less politically-correct beliefs and policies on Islamic immigration?

"Islamic immigration is not possible to integrate and is not capable of being assimilated into European culture"

Clearly there is interest. But why has it not been played on the CBC or BBC? Or any of the big American networks?

Also the former president of the Czech Republic, Vaclav Klaus – one of the few world leaders with a background in the sciences and a Euro-skeptic, as well as having published a book on why the fiction of anthropogenic global warming is, in fact, a plot with which to attack free market economics and those nations that practice it – recently spoke about the migration crisis in Europe in factual terms.

"The war has returned [...] but this time now it is war on our whole continent"

This one is interesting. In Feb. 2016, the President of Finland, Sauli Niinistö, gave a speech to the Finnish parliament in which he clearly criticized mass immigration. The state broadcaster found what he said so objectionable, much like the CBC would have, that they actually cut the audio off the broadcast forcing listeners watching live to hear over one minute of nothing as they watched him speak. The public raised such an outcry that they ended up adding the missing audio to the archived footage.

The current Czech president was questioned by a woman who owns a home in close proximity to a 'migrant' camp in the Czech republic. She asked why her country imports people who are making things difficult for the Czech locals.

President Miloš Zeman answers in part: "Integration is possible in cultures that are similar. [...] the experience of Western European countries which have ghettos where there are no-go zones and so on, demonstrate that the integration of a Muslim community is, in practice, not possible."

Thilo Sarazin was on the board of Germany's Bundes Bank at the time he wrote his book on Islamic immigration and its likely consequences to Germany and the West.

Prime Minister Robert Fico of Slovakia: "...the idea of a multicultural Europe has failed. [...] to minimize the risk of (terrorist) events like those in Paris or in Germany is to prevent the formation of a unified Islamic community in Slovakia."

The Czech president explains that it is, in fact, the Muslim Brotherhood that is behind the mass migration of young, fighting-age males to Europe.

If an election were held today, Geert Wilders, Leader of the People's Freedom Party in the Netherlands, would be Prime Minister. And I suspect by a wider margin than even the polls give him, given the people's reluctance to admit to pollsters that they are not Marxists. Geert sent out the following graphic to illustrate how liberal values should dominate Islamic ones.

There are, in fact, a great deal of clear statements made by Dutch leaders, French, Belgian (Vlaams Belang) German and even American dignitaries such as Admiral Ace Lyons who speak in the plainest terms about the dangers of cultural-Marxism and Islamic influence but get no play in the MSM.

Victor Orban, the president of Hungary, has made many speeches and given many interviews on the effects of mass migration on Hungary and Europe, especially Islamic immigration. Here he calls it "the rule book of another world".

So it is important to know as we are hammered with bad news from Europe, misinformation, disinformation and increased totalitarian information control, irrespective of the truth, that some leaders are speaking truth to politically-correct powers.

It is equally important to recognize that official media, government sponsored for the most part like the BBC and CBC, quite deliberately do not broadcast these people or their opinions unless it cannot be avoided as everyone may be already familiar with one, in which case they will spin it and distort it and attack it as hard as they can.

There are quite a few more leaders who speak out. Some in office and some who seek it and are close to achieving it, such as France's Marine Le Pen.

As these leaders come to our attention, we will translate and post their words. But for the moment, the significant aspect is that they exist, but we are for the most part, being denied access.

One is tempted to suspect that some kind of collusion is taking place denying us the basic ability to make free decisions based on the full spectrum of facts and information. How is this not a kind of leading edge totalitarianism based on information control, instead of the usual trailing edge one where you are tortured or 're-educated' for making the 'wrong' choices for yourself or your family?

Avi Levin, the "multi Islam" stage of denial, brings up every leftist meme on 'Islamophobia' and decadent western, saying "Islam is Islam, and democracy is the train we will ride to conquest." It is what it is and has been so for 1400 years.

What we have here is the Canadian 'Liberal elite' thought process, now solidly entrenched in the "Islamamour" fixation. I guess it is all so romantic to them, rather like a "midnight at the oasis" event, or 'Abdul A Bulbul Amir' sort of thing. Also permits them to pander to their Pathological altruism and virtue signaling.

Man we are in a deep pile of shit now. Thank our lucky stars for Hirsu Ally, what a gal and to Hell with chickenshit Brandeis University.

These European leaders are telling it like it is aka the truth, even if it is unpopular and offensive to, as the Czech President calls them, "The Sunshiners." He also points out that the feminists seem to pretty much okay with the way Muslim women are treated because they, like our own feminazis, don't seem to comment on these men and their women. That would be getting into uncomfortable and indefensible territory.

Nation-building relied on one thing and one thing only – securing the borders to create a secure environment for a people to live in and thrive. The West is blatantly diluting its military as seen in the Austrian Military video. Where Turdeau 1.0 left off, 2.0 is here to finish the job!

I am pleased that the Czech President recognizes that his duty is to secure his country, keep his people safe, and provide opportunity for those that wish to integrate and contribute to society; he doesn't want economic migrants because he states they, like all Western states, have their own kind living off of the system.

It should tell us a lot that 2 states that lived under communist rule can see the threat and want to act sovereignty against the insanity of EU quotas. There are still some leaders with balls. Having lived under former Soviet rule they recognize a threat to freedoms and institutions when they see it. Too long in comfort makes men weak and complacent.

Then you got the rest of the ostrich fraternity like Merkel, Cameron, Obama and Turdeau that are banking on the destruction of the West merely as a social experiment. Like "the Obama administration is anti-American, anti-democratic, pro-Muslim, pro-Iran, and pro-Muslim Brotherhood" so has Turdeau embraced Obama as idol and mentor.

I imagine Trump haters will have the exact same reaction to these European leaders because the truth can be a very ugly thing.

I am glad to see that some leaders are coming to their senses, starting to realize that what is happening. Importing so called Refugees, is nothing more than Hijrah or Jihad by immigration.

Leaders that allow this invasion to continue, are only doing so because they want to. In other words, they believe that their Country's will be better of under Sharia Law and the Islamification of the population. It gives them strict control, that will likely end up as Dictatorship.

Justin Turdeau is leading us down this path of destruction, he wants to, because of his delusions of grandeur.

Most days it's depressing to read the news. It's become self-evident to anyone with even a modicum of awareness that we are living in an era of institutionalized fraud. We are confronted with institutionalized fraud daily – not just in banking/Wall St., but in politics and government, media, education and science, religion, commodities (food/energy/resources), even professional sport.

What should bother us isn't that fraud is immoral, or that fraud is deplorable – it's that for fifteen thousand years of human/social development, fraud (and selfish short sighted thinking which condones it), has never, ever worked out well for the cultures it infects. Not once. Eventually everyone gets caught up in the catastrophe of a correction and things go very badly for all involved. When the hell did we forget all that? We have the benefit of 6000 years of historic record punctuated with the documented fallibility of fraudulence and fraudulent enterprise – yet we choose to accept contemporary institutional fraudulence because our arrogance tells us it will be "different for us" –we are special – our civilization will not be corroded by the fraud which we all are aware of at some level. I thought we were better than this, I really did.

America, Europe, "the west" are in open decline precipitated by market/economic melt downs, leadership melt downs and cultural melt down – all because we believed we could build utopia by accepting the institutional narratives of fraud. This convinces me there is such a thing as cultural suicide.

The opposition is out there, but they are drowned out by the Progressive-Sodomites. But in time, as the volume of attacks by Islamists heats up, and the people are left to their own devices to defend themselves, because the authorities are powerless to do anything, then you will see the politicians turn tail and run, like the cowards they are. Guess what? Islamists don't vote, so they will discover that the pro-Islamist policies were for naught. I have no problem with any backlash against Islamists, violent or otherwise. When dealing with this threat, war will be necessary and it should be welcomed. As for these compliant pro-Islamist politicians, putting them against a wall and filling them with bullets is too good for them, but we can't do anything worse.

I stopped listening to multi millionaire socialists a long time ago. I find it funny that Avi Lewis' grandfather was one of the founders of the NDP party yet his father Stephen Lewis (another staunch socialist NDPer) made sure that they lived in a mansion in Forest Hill and he attended Upper Canada College with all of the other sons of Canada's wealthy and elite. Talk about hypocrites.

Mark Zuckerberg: German Refugee Policies 'Inspiring,' U.S. Should 'Follow Their Lead'

By Pamela Geller
29 February 2016

Perhaps Zuckerberg should follow Merkel to Germany and live as a Jew among the Muslim migrants who he finds so inspiring.

My posts on Facebook have been blocked, as have those of Robert Spencer's Jihad Watch. Many of you have written me and complained. My Page has close to 300,000 followers. It's a critical means to communicate what the media won't, which is why they've blocked me. I'll wait it out. We need Facebook. But I will call out Zuckerberg for the pathetic tool that he is.

Mark Zuckerberg praised Germany for their "inspiring" refugee policies during a visit to the country and reiterated his commitment to combating "hate speech" on Facebook.

Speaking at a town hall event in Berlin, the 31-year old billionaire said German leadership in the refugee crisis has been "inspiring" and a "role model for the world."

"I hope other countries follow Germany's lead on this," he added. "I hope the U.S. follows Germany's lead on this."

Speaking at the same event, Zuckerberg also emphasized his commitment to tackling "hate speech" on Facebook.

"Hate speech has no place on Facebook and in our community," he said. "Until recently in Germany I don't think we were doing a good enough job, and I think we will continue needing to do a better and better job."

Zuckerberg added that the company would place a special priority on tackling hate speech against migrants. Facebook's policies, he said, would "now include hate speech against migrants as an important part of what we just now have no tolerance for."

Germany has been exerting considerable pressure on Facebook to co-operate with them to remove alleged "hate speech" against migrants on the platform. In September, German chancellor Angela Merkel was caught on tape at a luncheon event pressing Zuckerberg on the issue.

Since then, Facebook has dramatically expanded its anti-hate speech efforts, launching a new initiative to combat "racist and xenophobic" material on social media alongside European NGOs this January. Facebook is also cooperating with a task force set up by the Germany Justice Ministry to hunt down alleged racists on the platform.

The Germany government is taking a hard line against online critics of its refugee policies. In September, it emerged that the government had hired an organization led by a former Stasi agent to patrol Facebook for allegedly xenophobic comments.

With discontent at Angela Merkel's refugee policies — which the Gatestone Institute links directly to the rape epidemic currently sweeping Germany — at an all time high, the government has found a valuable ally in the Facebook CEO. As we've previously highlighted at Breitbart Tech, the power of Facebook to monitor the lives and conversations of ordinary Germans is greater than the Stasi's ever was.

Belgian police find evidence that the Islamic State is looking to build dirty bomb

By Robert Spencer
29 February 2016

Belgian police, while searching the home of an Islamic State or ISIS suspect after the Paris bombings last year, found surveillance films taken of a senior researcher at a Belgian nuclear center, which produces a significant portion of the world's radioisotopes, and his family. Police suspect ISIS terrorists wanted to capture the man or his family members and hold them for ransom in exchange for nuclear materials.

"We can imagine that the terrorists might want to kidnap someone or kidnap his family," so they can force their target to turn over the radioactive innards of such a device after removing the materials surreptitiously, said Nele Scheerlinck, a spokeswoman for Belgium's Federal Agency for Nuclear Control, the nation's nuclear regulator, NBC News reported.

"We know that it would not require a team of nuclear physicists or even a particularly sophisticated criminal network to turn raw material into a deadly weapon," an internal Energy Department report on the threat, designated "Official Use Only," declared in May 2013. "In many cases, a determined lone wolf or a disgruntled insider is all it might take."

This incident is the first public, confirmed evidence that ISIS is attempting to acquire radioactive material to build a dirty bomb and threaten Western cities. The prospect of obtaining material in this manner is especially troubling as there are hundreds of thousands of nuclear building blocks for a bomb located around the world in medical and industrial sites. Just recently, radioactive industrial material was reported stolen in Iraq.

Thankfully, the Obama administration said at the time that they had no evidence the material was obtained by ISIS for use in a dirty bomb and they were monitoring the situation....

EU Commission slaps down Hungary for daring to hold referendum on migrant quotas

By Nick Hallett
27 Feb 2016

The European Commission is planning to slap down Hungary's decision to hold a referendum on compulsory migrant quotas, claiming that holding a democratic vote would not "fit into the decision-making process" agreed by European Union (EU) states.

The quota system redistributes migrants from the most overwhelmed countries, including Germany, Greece and Italy, to EU states that have proved less popular with newly-arrived migrants.

The system is extremely unpopular in Eastern European countries, including Hungary, who feel Western Europe is using it to force thousands of migrants on them.

Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban now plans to challenge the policy by holding a referendum on quotas that will almost certainly see the plan rejected.

However, Euractive reports that the European Commission has questioned Hungary's stance. Spokeswoman Natasha Bertaud said: "We fail to understand how it would fit into the decision-making process which was agreed to by all member states, including Hungary, under the EU treaties."

Mr. Orban defended his decision in an interview with German tabloid Bild, telling the paper: "We cannot make decisions over people's heads that will significantly change their lives and those of future generations."

"The quota would change the profile of Hungary and Europe: ethnically, culturally, and religiously. My decision is not directed against Europe. It is a decision to protect European democracy."

He added that the EU's quota system violates its own laws: "This decision is not legal. It contradicts EU law. We are filing a suit against it, and so are the Slovaks. Plus, how many of those 160,000 have been distributed so far? Only a few hundred. This distribution key is nonsense, it does not work. But no one in Brussels wants to admit that."

Mr. Orban also laughed off any threat of EU sanctions against Hungary for failing to comply: "That is nothing but attempted scaremongering! The next EU budget will be decided in 2020. Sanctions would then, i.e. in a couple of years, require the votes of all member states. That will not happen."

Allow the citizens to speak directly on immigration matters

Some governments of European nations are giving the people the chance to let them know how they feel and drive policy about immigration through referendums. Hungary is planning a referendum regarding migrants, Switzerland recently voted for immigration to be reduced and the UK has an upcoming vote on whether or not to leave the EU which is greatly driven by the mass migration to Britain over the last decade.

Despite all the Canadian government rhetoric and the media's ability to gloss over any negative effects of immigration to Canada there is a substantial portion of the population that are against mass immigration. One could imagine that if all the forces of the government and media were not constantly banging the mass immigration drum and alternative points of view were encouraged rather than demeaned then support would be much lower for mass immigration. Through shaming tactics these institutions have suppressed the expression of the people and it's time that we had a leader that fought for the interests of Canadians allowing them, in the purest form of democracy, to vote and speak on the issue directly.

That is interesting, Boris has a similar quandary about Mecca, Medina, and about a score of military bases in Israel, Iran, Turkey, etc. Of course, any and all Mohammedans and Zionists need to be returned to their homelands before any action is taken; and all Americans and Europeans withdrawn from these primitive cultures.* The entire ME is nothing but a cesspool of warring savages propped up by US and European financial interests. If they aren't disciplined, they will continue to believe that their satanic verses licenses and guarantees their self-righteous violence with impunity.

* Perhaps such an encompassing cooperation would be sufficient to oblige their attention and exact compliance. And the thought of keeping untrustworthy savages relegated to their homelands is also quite savory.

Yes, why is our Western culture so feeble now? May I suggest is a consequence of 70 years of peace in Europe (more NATO than EU, Ukraine!) and the inevitable 'feminization' of the politics of western European democracies. With this sustained peace, the need for the masculine virtues of a deterring military strength and decisive defence policy has been demeaned within Europe and in particular the 'inclusive' EU. They have been overwhelmed and ridiculed by the more feminine values of humanitarianism, appeasement and, dare I say it, naïveté. Make no mistake, it is an excellent feature of our free and egalitarian society that significant numbers of women lead our politics across Europe. Great politicians such as Merkel, Solberg (Norway), Szydło (Poland) instinctively (and with the support of their voters?) react to issues such as the ongoing ME invasion in a humanitarian way. Sadly they disregard the more male response that includes the pragmatic issues of cultural integration and conflict, expense and most importantly, security. Basically our emasculated politics has taken the fight out of us. Both obfuscation and the 'it'll all be ok, Brussels will solve the problems' attitude has introduced a degree of separation that disenfranchises us all. Western politicians need to 'grow a pair' or life as we enjoy it now will be less wealthy, less free and most importantly less secure.

During the Cold War, the Soviet Union funded "peace movements" throughout the west | because for the Soviets "peace" meant "the absence of opposition". In our time the new peace movement is Islam. And so we are told today, from the podium of a mosque with "extremist" "links", that the very word Islam means "peace". Actually, it means "submission" - i.e., the absence of opposition. The only difference between then and now is that instead of being chanted by scrofulous hippies protesting outside a NATO air base the old line's being peddled to us by the President of the United States. Odd.

Europe is no longer Europe, it is Eurabia, a colony of Islam, where the Islamic invasion does not proceed only in a physical sense, but also in a mental and cultural sense. Servility to the invaders has poisoned democracy, with obvious consequences for the freedom of thought, and for the concept itself of liberty. State-run television stations contribute to the resurgent anti-Semitism, crying only over Palestinian deaths while playing down Israeli deaths, glossing over them in unwilling tones. The increased presence of Muslims in Italy and in Europe is directly proportional to our loss of freedom... The Muslims refuse our culture and try to impose their culture on us. I reject them, and this is not only my duty toward my culture-it is toward my values, my principles, my civilization....The West reveals a hatred of itself, which is strange and can only be considered pathological; it now sees only what is deplorable and destructive. President Bush has said, 'We refuse to live in fear.' Beautiful sentence, very beautiful. I loved it! But inexact, Mr. President, because the West does live in fear. People are afraid to speak against the Islamic world. Afraid to offend, and to be punished for offending, the sons of Allah. You can insult the Christians, the Buddhists, the Hindus, the Jews. You can slander the Catholics, you can spit on the Madonna and Jesus Christ. But, woe betide the citizen who pronounces a word against the Islamic religion. - Oriana Fallaci

"In my study of communist societies, I came to the conclusion that the purpose of communist propaganda was not to persuade or convince, not to inform, but to humiliate; and therefore, the less it corresponded to reality the better. When people are forced to remain silent when they are being told the most obvious lies, or even worse when they are forced to repeat the lies themselves, they lose once and for all their sense of probity. To assent to obvious lies is...in some small way to become evil oneself. One's standing to resist anything is thus eroded, and even destroyed. A society of emasculated liars is easy to control. I think if you examine political correctness, it has the same effect and is intended to." - Theodore Dalrymple

Christianity is not the creed of Asia and Africa at this moment solely because the seventh century Christians of Asia and Africa had trained themselves not to fight, whereas the Moslems were trained to fight. Christianity was saved in Europe solely because the peoples of Europe fought. ... The civilization of Europe, American and Australia exists today at all only because of the victories of civilized man over the enemies of civilization because of victories through the centuries from Charles Martel in the eighth century and those of John Sobieski in the seventeenth century....There are such "social values" today in Europe, America and Australia only because during those thousand years, the Christians of Europe possessed the warlike power to do what the Christians of Asia and Africa had failed to do — that is, to beat back the Moslem invader. - Theodore Roosevelt

Tory MP calls out Turdeau for refusing to call ISIS attacks on Christians 'genocide'

26 Feb 2016

Conservative MP Cheryl Gallant called out Liberal Prime Minister Justin Turdeau in the House of Commons today over his refusal to recognize as "genocide" the sweeping targeting of Christians by ISIS in the Middle East.

Noting how the European Parliament passed a unanimous resolution earlier this month recognizing the Islamic State's attacks on Christians as "genocide," Gallant stated: "In Canada, the Liberal Prime Minister refuses to join the rest of the civilized world in recognizing the ISIS campaign against Christians and other religious minorities as genocide."

"The silence is deafening. Why does the Prime Minister not think Christians and other religious minorities are the right kind of refugees?" she added.

Designating attacks against Christians in the Middle East as "genocide" could have significant policy implications in terms of offering such victims aid, asylum, and other protections.

Gallant's statement comes on top of countless reports of anti-Christian outrages by ISIS, including mass beheadings and executions in Syria and Iraq.

Reverend Canon Andrew White, known in Iraq as the "Vicar of Baghdad," told LifeSiteNews columnist Jonathan Van Maren in 2014 how terrible the situation had become at that time.

"It's just been terrible. They have been amputating people's heads and putting them on railings. They have chopped children in half. You know, I write some of these things on my blog and nobody believes it," he said.

Gallant, MP for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, noted in her statement how ISIS has a history of particularly targeting religious minorities, including Syrian Christians and Yazidis, whom it considers heretics and disbelievers.

"Thousands of Yazidis have been summarily executed, killed, or, in the case of Yazidi women, kidnapped and sold into slavery by ISIS. Hundreds of thousands of Christians have fled Syria amid threats by ISIS," she said.

Earlier this month, Catholic and Evangelical Protestant organizations raised alarm after Trudeau government's announced a plan to eliminate both the Office of Religious Freedom and the ambassadorship attached to it.

Former CIA Agent: "The ISIS Leader Abu Bakr Al Baghdadi Was Trained by the Israeli Mossad"

By Anas Chihab
17 July 2014

The former NSA and CIA agent Edward Snowden revealed that the leader of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria Abu Bakr Al Baghdadi was trained in Israel, various Iranian sources reported.

Snowden added that the American CIA and the British Intelligence collaborated with the Israeli Mossad to create a terrorist organization that is able to attract all extremists of the world to one place, using a strategy called "the hornet's nest."

The "Hornet's nest" strategy aims to bring all the major threats to one place in order to track them, and mostly to shake the stability of the Arab countries. The NSA agent revealed that the ISIS "Caliph", Abu Bakr Al Baghdadi went through intense military training in the Israeli intelligence "Mossad."

Besides military training, Al Baghdadi studied communication and public speaking skills in order to attract "terrorists" from all the corners of the world.

The Centre for Research on Globalization (CRG), an independent non-profit organization in the province of Quebec, Canada, which focuses on research and media, relayed a story about this as well, adding that "three countries created a terrorist organization that is able to attract all extremists of the world to one place," using the aforementioned "the hornet's nest" strategy.

"The only solution for the protection of the Jewish state is to create an enemy near its borders," Snowden was reported to say.

The Weakness of the West

Anne Marie Waters
27 February 2016

Constructive Islamic discussion is Islam compatible with western democracy?

The Western world is in great danger. That may sound alarmist but if one looks at the million or so young, often hostile, fighting aged males pouring in to Germany, we must admit that there is at least a cause for concern. This concern should be even greater when we consider that the influx to Germany looks set to continue – there is no end in sight. In addition, our governments are not only denying the possibility of danger, but actively attack those who oppose this mass migration. Speaking up for modern Western norms such as secularism, gender equality, and freedom of speech is now viewed as an act of hatred, something only undertaken by "fascists". Countless people throughout the West believe that others have a right to come here, that we are somehow in debt to the world, and are responsible for each and every problem. In short, the West is weak and apologetic, and there is one very good reason for this. We have had our identity stolen from us and our nation-states are being dissolved.

Our national identity has been systematically dismantled so that we no longer even identify with our countries, much less are willing to take action to save them. The nation-state has been weakened and undermined, quite deliberately, since the end of the second world war. Political leaders post 1945 appeared to believe that because Hitler was a nationalist, nationalism had been the cause of the war. Extreme nationalism is a dangerous thing, there is no denying it. It can, if taken to dangerous limits, mean racism or other injustices, but there was no need to get rid of nationalism altogether in order to prevent it from becoming extreme. Like feminism's error in attacking all aspects of masculinity, attacking all aspects of nationalism was an enormous mistake and has weakened us immensely. Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher once offered an opinion on what had caused world war 2. Like me, she believed that emerging post-war leaders blamed the war on nationalism, and like me, she dismissed this. According to Thatcher, it was not nationalism that had been the problem, it had been appeasement. If leaders had grown a spine and stood up to Hitler from the get-go, he would never have gotten as far as invading Poland. But a policy of appeasement allowed him to get away with what should have been unthinkable, over and over again. Today, we are appeasing Islam, and the result is quite likely to be very similar.

As a result of this disdain for nationalism, internationalism became the norm – and today, we are absolutely steeped in it. The brainwashing as to the inevitability of internationalism is almost too great to reverse, but we must try in any case. Internationalism has entrenched the idea that an independent and robust nation-state, which acts in its own best interests, is an old-fashioned oddity at best, and immorally racist at worst.

Internationalism has destroyed the concept of citizenship so that the citizens of Germany for example are deemed to deserve no greater privilege in that country than someone who has just arrived. We saw this in Cologne following the mass sexual assault. The insistence of authorities that the culprits be treated as anyone else reinforced the notion that German citizenship is meaningless – Germany owes rights and protections to the whole world, even if they happen to threaten German people. It is a risible situation.

In Britain, we have the spectacle of non-British rapists attacking 1000s of British girls, and who look to human rights laws to avoid deportation. What these laws will do is consider only the rights of an imported rapist, and ignore entirely the rights of British women and girls to be free of the risk these men pose. The rights of British girls are not deemed more important in Britain than the rights of non-British rapists, because the rights of the British are no more important in Britain than anyone else's. Being a British citizen affords no advantage whatsoever.

I am frequently asked what I would do about the current migrant invasion in to Europe, and my first answer is always that we need to close the borders as a matter of urgency. I don't think I can recall an occasion when a journalist didn't argue with me that this wasn't possible. Of course it's possible. It's possible if we believe in our nation-states and in nation-state sovereignty.

International bodies shot up after World War 2. The post-war era gave birth to both the UN and what would eventually become the EU; both are hugely problematic – corrupt, undemocratic, and the UN in particular has taken appeasement to new levels, especially when it comes to Islam. The UN has allowed the vilest Islamic states on the planet to legitimately sit on boards designed to protect human rights. Combine this with its incessant attacks on Israel, and the UN has become entirely morally bankrupt and ought to be disbanded – without being replaced. But the UN is even more dangerous than that – it has tried to remove the independent ability of a nation-state to defend itself. Countries which seek to go to war now very often try to bring most of the world with them – via the UN. The UN has made it the norm for a country to seek the blessing of an international group in order to defend its individual interests. It has planted the seed of global internationalism and made it feel inevitable – and moral - to the extent that vast numbers of people now believe that border control isn't even a possibility.

The reduction in status of the great Western powers is significant in discussing our failure to defend ourselves. We have lost confidence. We now seek the permission of others to make decisions for ourselves. Nowhere is this more incredibly evident than in the spectacle of the British Prime Minister asking other European leaders whether or not they will allow him to make changes to his own country's benefit system. All EU leaders must agree. This is now how international politics works.

Children are taught the apparent moral value of multiculturalism pretty much from their first day in school. Great efforts are made to celebrate all of the world's cultures – except one, ours. In fact, the opposite is happening. In celebrating cultures vastly different from our own, and often vastly inferior, we are being taught not only that our culture is not superior to others, but that others are superior to ours. This is the case regardless of how people are treated in those cultures (many are appallingly oppressive) and regardless of what good the West may have done, and continues to do, for the world. This is being bred in to children from a young age. Along with the British, the Germans are particularly encouraged to hate themselves – and it has worked. When your country is constantly identified as having been responsible only for evil, and this is reinforced even by your own Chancellor (Merkel has said that the Germans have a duty to the world by virtue of their past, they don't), is it any wonder that the Germans are not inclined to defend themselves, even when large numbers of strangers arrive and directly threaten their country, their way of life, their daughters, and eventually their democracy?

I wouldn't mind betting that there are a great deal of Germans who, on seeing the violence unleashed on to their streets, will say to themselves "yes but look what we did in the past" and as a result will believe (even if only subconsciously) that they deserve the treatment they are now being subjected to. Instead of fighting invaders, they instead turn on themselves and refuse to see themselves as innocent victims of an invasion. If they do not see themselves as the injured party, what motivation is there to fight? If they don't see Germany as being worthy of defending, what motivation can there possibly be to defend it?

Europeans must begin to believe in ourselves again, as must the West in general. We have to remember what makes us great – liberty, democracy, and enlightenment values. We should teach children about the enormous contribution that the West has made to the world, and indeed why so many people want to come here. We need to tell them about great European art, philosophy, and science. Until we can find our sense of self-worth, we will continue to allow others to dominate us on our own lands. If this happens, Western society will die out altogether and one of the world's great lights will be permanently snuffed out.

Canada: Senior imam mocks the Western idea of “marital rape”

By Robert Spencer
28 February 2016

A hadith depicts Muhammad saying: “If a husband calls his wife to his bed [i.e. to have sexual relation] and she refuses and causes him to sleep in anger, the angels will curse her till morning” (Bukhari 4.54.460).

And: “By him in Whose Hand lies my life, a woman can not carry out the right of her Lord, till she carries out the right of her husband. And if he asks her to surrender herself [to him for sexual intercourse] she should not refuse him even if she is on a camel's saddle” (Ibn Majah 1854).

Sheik Houssein Muhammad Amer (رداء دمحم نيسح) is the Imam of Centre Aljisir (الجمهورية الإسلامية) in Laval, Quebec also a member of Québec council of Imams.

In a lecture at Al-Rawdah Mosque in Montréal (published on 2 September 2015), Imam Houssein Amer mocked the Western idea of “marital rape” and explained the differences between the West and Islam in this regard.

The following are excerpts of Houssein Amer's speech (originally in Arabic):

“According to the Western view, the woman who is a spouse – her husband is not allowed to force her to have sex with him. It is forbidden. Why? Because, this is her freedom [of choice]. They [the West] were the first to establish the term of “marital rape”. Is it possible that a husband rapes his wife? Yes. He forces her to have sex with him. It is forbidden. Mistake. She may complain. Glory be to Allah.

“At the same time, some of our brothers, the preachers, told a story that happened in Germany. A German brother converted to Islam. His wife remained German [non-Muslim], and she defied him by bringing her lover to the house. Afterwards, the issue developed into a sexual intercourse. He hit her lover. She called the Police. The wife called the Police, told them: my lover has been attacked in my home. As you have rights in home I also have rights in home. When the Police arrived and listened to both sides, the Policeman told him [the husband]: The Law does not ban her, and you cannot ban her from having any sexual activity even with somebody else. Are you upset? Do the same like her. There is no power but in Allah.

“They [the West] made no difference even between the legitimate aspect [sex within marriage] which we have discussed and which serves as a guarantee from the this disease [HIV] and the sex outside marriage, Glory be to Allah, Glory be to Almighty Allah.

“And worse than that, they opened the other issues, such as homosexuality, man with man, woman with woman, and nowadays a man can go with a man to a church and a priest marries them. Some brothers say: let them live in halal [legitimate status]. They live together in contradiction to the [Islamic] Law, Glory be to Allah. I'm saying that the proper moral approach is that there is freedom [of choice] but within the Islamic Law, within the Islamic Law. You are a free-person in your subjugation to Almighty Allah.”

In a previous sermon (published on 31 December 2010) Imam Houssein Amer justified the wisdom of wife beating in Islam (“not severely”) as a last resort and as an act of education in case the husband fails to convince his wife to return to the right path of Islam.

Here is an excerpt of Amer's sermon (originally in Arabic):

“The Prophet [Muhammad], peace be upon him, says: if they [wives] do so, then, [the husbands should] beat them but not severely [Muslim 1218]. Some people argue, when they hear this text, that the Islamic Law permitted wife beating, and other people say, when hearing it, that Islam oppresses the wife by allowing the husband to beat her.”

“My brothers and my loved ones, the beating in Islam is a type of education, and it is said that it is the last resort [literally “the last medicine”, meaning a medicine that is administered after all others failed to cure the illness as it is said in the hadith:] the last medicine is burning [the skin with fire].”

“The West prohibits the beating for the purpose of education and this is the position that was taken there. However, the truth is otherwise. The beating is a type of education... the beating is used after exhausting all effective and successful [possible] solutions and [it turned out that] there is no treatment without it.”

“The Koran referred to the beating in the context of a series of treatment saying: But those [wives] from whom you fear arrogance – [first] advise them; [then if they persist], forsake them in bed; and [finally], strike them. But if they obey you [once more], seek no means against them [Surat An-Nisā', 34].”

“This is the case regarding the wife if you are right, and she should be admonished, her husband should remind her his rights over her and she should return to Follow @her Lord Almighty. In case that the admonition and the advice fail in dealing with her, he [the husband] has to abandon the bed, meaning to distance himself from her, to snub her, to avoid touching her to the point that he will not dream on her, and if the estrangement fails the beating [of the wife] is permitted, as the Prophet said: not severe beating.”

German government admits: over 130,000 “refugees” have disappeared

“More than 130,000 asylum seekers may have disappeared in Germany, according to newly released government figures, raising concerns over terrorism and organized crime.” They haven't disappeared in order to assimilate and find jobs and become productive members of society. They've disappeared in order to plot new jihad terror attacks (remember there were “refugees” among the Paris jihad killers in November) and that was just a harbinger of things to come.

More than 130,000 asylum seekers may have disappeared in Germany, according to newly released government figures, raising concerns over terrorism and organized crime.

In a parliamentary answer, Angela Merkel's government said it had lost track of around 13 per cent of the 1.1 million people registered as asylum seekers last year.

The missing people never arrived at official government refugee accommodation which had been assigned to them.

The interior ministry later tried to row back on the admission, claiming the figures had been exaggerated by errors in data entry.

But there will be concerns those unaccounted for could include Islamic extremists or organized criminals who entered the country posing as refugees.

The new figures emerged just two months after unconfirmed reports the German authorities were urgently searching for 12 asylum seekers who had vanished.

They were believed to have crossed the border using forged passports from the same source as those used by some of the Paris attackers.

The latest admission came in a written answer to a parliamentary question from the opposition Left Party.

The government said it believed many of those who had disappeared had simply moved on to other countries, while others had “gone underground illegally”

Declassified Emails Reveal NATO Killed Gaddafi to Stop Libyan Creation of Gold-Backed Currency

In spite of French-led U.N. Security Council Resolution 1973 creating a no-fly zone over Libya with the express intent of protecting civilians, one of the over 3000 new Hillary Clinton emails released by the State Department on New Year's Eve, contain damning evidence of Western nations using NATO as a tool to topple Libyan leader Muammar al-Gaddafi. The NATO overthrow was not for the protection of the people, but instead it was to thwart Gaddafi's attempt to create a gold-backed African currency to compete with the Western central banking monopoly.

The emails indicate the French-led NATO military initiative in Libya was also driven by a desire to gain access to a greater share of Libyan oil production, and to undermine a long term plan by Gaddafi to supplant France as the dominant power in the Francophone Africa region.

The April 2011 email, sent to the Secretary of State Hillary by unofficial adviser and longtime Clinton confidante Sidney Blumenthal with the subject line "France's client and Qaddafi's gold," reveals predatory Western intentions.

The Foreign Policy Journal reports:

The email identifies French President Nicholas Sarkozy as leading the attack on Libya with five specific purposes in mind: to obtain Libyan oil, ensure French influence in the region, increase Sarkozy's reputation domestically, assert French military power, and to prevent Gaddafi's influence in what is considered "Francophone Africa."

Most astounding is the lengthy section delineating the huge threat that Gaddafi's gold and silver reserves, estimated at "143 tons of gold, and a similar amount in silver," posed to the French franc (CFA) circulating as a prime African currency.

The email makes clear that intelligence sources indicate the impetus behind the French attack on Libya was a calculated move to consolidate greater power, using NATO as a tool for imperialist conquest, not a humanitarian intervention as the public was falsely led to believe.

According to the email:

This gold was accumulated prior to the current rebellion and was intended to be used to establish a pan-African currency based on the Libyan golden Dinar. This plan was designed to provide the Francophone African Countries with an alternative to the French franc (CFA).

(Source Comment: According to knowledgeable individuals this quantity of gold and silver is valued at more than $7 billion. French intelligence officers discovered this plan shortly after the current rebellion began, and this was one of the factors that influenced President Nicolas Sarkozy's decision to commit France to the attack on Libya.)

The email provides a peek behind the curtain to reveal how foreign policy is often carried out in practice. While reported in the media that the Western backed Libyan military intervention is necessary to save human lives, the real driving factor behind the intervention was shown to be the fact that Gaddafi planned to create a high degree of economic independence with a new pan-African currency, which would lessen French influence and power in the region.

The evidence indicates that when French intelligence became aware of the Libyan initiative to create a currency to compete with the Western central banking system, the decision to subvert the plan through military means began, ultimately including the NATO alliance.

Wilfrid Laurier - "We must insist that the immigrant that comes here is willing to become a Canadian and is willing to assimilate our ways, he should be treated on equal grounds and it would be shameful to discriminate against such a person for reasons of their beliefs or the place of birth or origin. But it is the responsibility of that person to become a Canadian in all aspects of life, nothing else but a Canadian. There can be no divided allegiance here. Any man who says that he is a Canadian, but tries to impose his customs and habits upon us, is not a Canadian. We have room for only one flag, the Canadian flag. There is room for only two languages here, English and French. And we have room for loyalty, but only one, loyalty to the Canadian people. We won't accept anyone, I'm saying anyone, who will try to impose his religion or his customs on us." - 1907
